Jawaharlal Nehru S The Discovery

The Discovery of India was written by India's first Prime Minister Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru during his imprisonment in 1942-1945 at Ahmednagar fort in Maharashtra, India by the British during the British Raj before the independence of India. Some claim that The Discovery of India is an honour paid to the rich cultural heritage of India, its history and its philosophy as seen through the eyes of a patriot fighting for the independence of his country.

Jawaharlal Nehru's Place In History

Contrast this with Jawaharlal Nehru's account in The Discovery of India of his election tours in 1936-37, more than eight decades ago, in which on one occasion he clocked a 23-hour day, and the variety of modes of transport used by him, which included elephants, canoes, bicycles, and his own feet. Read about it in his own words:

How Jawaharlal Nehru travelled through India, in his own words

This is a very beautiful nationalistic treatise written by Jawaharlal Nehru while he was imprisoned in Ahmednagar fort. An impressionistic and romanticised work. The title "Discovery of India" reveals the orientalist nature of the work. Nehru approaches India's past like an outsider. He wrote this book as his own attempt to "discover" India.

This week, in keeping with the ongoing election season, we bring to our readers Jawaharlal Nehru's reflections in The Discovery of India on his election tours in 1936-37, to give us a sense of where we began and where we have reached, what has changed and what has remained. Someone took the trouble to estimate that during these months some ten million persons actually attended the meetings I addressed, while some additional millions were brought into some kind of touch with me during my ...
