century Scottish noble family. When we first meet him, Lymond (as most call him) has just returned to his homeland, despite having been declared an outlaw and excommunicate. He is an autodidact and a polyglot, with a broad knowledge of literature and philosophy, a talented musician and master of disguise, and an expert swordsman, archer, and military strategist.

What I liked most about Queen's Play was the author's gradual and subtle crafting of Lymond's growing consciousness of leadership. It was very well handled. In this book, which is the second of the Lymond chronicles (16th century), Francis Crawford (Master of Lymond) was a little less intellectually scintillating than he was in The Game of Kings, but still dazzling and dangerous.

To me Game of Kings (book 1) is the easiest read of the Lymond Chronicles. Book 2 - Queens' Play I think is the most difficult. For a start you are not going to find Lymond for the first few chapters, and then when you do you get introduced to Vervassal Herald. Dunnett's prose and tendency for her character to quote in different language ...
